The author was completely genius of misleading. She definitely killed my spider senses and till the end I couldn't get whodunit and she came behind sucker punched me at the end. Great job because as a born in the April Fool's day kind of person (not kind of actually, literally I was born on that day and I never forgive my parents for the pranks I've been enduring for years) I always tried to more cautious to catch the clues hid behind the lines but the author's misdirection was impeccable. One more time I became the fool one! (At least I am not floating clown! Bite me Pennywise)

The characters were surprisingly fine and I didn't feel itchy fingers to punch or slap them. Maybe I'm losing my touch or becoming sweeter or nicer person (The woman I screamed at today who was grabbing the last bottle of Chardonnay wouldn't think the same but this is irrelevant! I'm still softhearted angel!)

Sienna turned back to her childhood town, gathered the dark and broken pieces from her past and took care of her mother who suffered from mental illness. (I visualized her as Sissy Spacek. She would be a great paranoid mother) By the way a murder case related to her reopens. She'd found the corpse and she always thought the killer had been behind her, he had wrongly killed the other girl.

As soon as she got back in town, she started getting suspicious phone calls. Maybe the killer learned she was back and he planned to finish what he had started. And look out the handsome neighbor who recently moved next door, acting like Sienna's knight in shining armor. Yes : hottie boy next door alert! But is the neighbor trustworthy hottie or devil disguised behind angel face? Or does Sienna's protective and goodhearted step brother have really good intentions about his sister or is he hiding something? Or could her mother's paranoid thoughts be somewhat true?

No spoils! Mouth zipped! Read it and get ready to be surprised! That book was not the best thriller I've read on this year because there is really serious competition. And there are many perfect examples I've read lately. But it is still great, heart throbbing, witty, gripping, fast reading. I didn't get bored for a second.

Sienna has been living with her grandmother for ten years in London. When Sienna was a teenager she found a girl dead in the snow, when she was walking back to her dorm room. The girl was one of her classmates. Sienna thought she might of been the killers target that night since her classmate was wearing a white coat that was identical to hers. So that is why she moved to her grandmother's house.

The girl was one of her classmates. Sienna thought she might of been the killers target that night since her classmate was wearing a white coat that was identical to hers. So that is why she moved to her grandmother's house.

She then decides to move back home because her mother has been having paranoid delusions, and she is always thinking people are after to harm her and her family. She has a mental illness. Sienna wants to take care of her because her mother had been in and out of treatment facilities. Sienna's biggest fear is that she will inherit her mother's mental illness.

The case of the murdered classmate has never been solved and the case has been reopened when she returns home. She sees a white van that passes her house multiple times every day. Sienna starts feeling paranoid.

This is the second book that I read by this author and I am becoming a big fan of this author.

This book kept me captivated. I could not put this book down. I kept guessing and guessing who the murderer was. Every character seems to be untrustable. I didn't know who I could trust. Each time I guessed, I was wrong. I even guessed the killer at one point, but then changed my mind to someone else. When the killer was revealed, I wasn't surprised. This was not a predictable read for me.

This is a fast paced read and is filled with suspense. The chapters were short and I kept telling myself one more chapter before I put the book down and would read a lot more chapters. I love short chapters and wish every that every book was written this way. This book was very well written.

The characters were very well developed with a lot of unlikable characters. I really loved Sienna though which is a good thing because I have to at least love one of the characters. I also felt so sorry for Sienna's Mom and what she went through every day.

I loved the twist at the end and I did not see it coming. I was on the edge of my seat reading this book.

HAPPY PUBLICATION DAY!

I haven't read any Erica Spindler thrillers in a few years but have always loved them. She deftly lobs red herrings and masterfully misdirects while delivering excellent characters.

This book does a great job of sensitively illustrating the impact of mental illness on entire families but manages to weave it into the mystery and it doesn't drag down the story.

It moves quickly, has many likable and unlikable characters, and resolves surprisingly and satisfactorily.

There are two look-alikes in this book: There is the murdered girl who was wearing the same coat as Sienna. And then there is Sienna's mother to whom bears an uncanny resemblance. There are two look-alikes in this book: There is the murdered girl who was wearing the same coat as Sienna. And then there is Sienna's mother to whom bears an uncanny resemblance. Because she was wearing the same coat as the murder victim, Sienna must have been the target. And since she looks like her mother, she must have inherited her mother's illness--this train of thought drove me crazy, as it oversimplifies the complexity of mental illness. There are additional reasons why Sienna believes she might have the same illness as her mother, but they are not fully explored.

I didn't know their motive until later, which gave me something to read for. I found the writing, especially the dialogue, stilted. Additionally, I had some issues with Sienna's character. She makes a lot of stupid choices, whines a lot, and is quite immature (her immaturity is intentional). Her romantic life plays a significant role and had me rolling my eyes. She sees what's happening around her in black and white terms.
